ABSTINENCE

All last month we focused on abstinence and there were so many helpful thoughts that were shared. Here are some of them:

Don't take that first compulsive bite.

Nothing tastes as good as neutrality with food feels.

Grab the pencil and paper and write out your feelings before you take a bite.

Use the tools of the program first.

It feels so good when you are free of the compulsive behaviors and obsessive thoughts of our addiction.

It is an up-and-down process of recovery, you are free, and then you get caught in it again, and then you find yourself free once more. It seems this is the way recovery comes to some of us.

What works for one person, may be very different than what works for another.

Some find writing their food down every day keeps them more conscious and aware.

Some people needed to follow their plan strictly and precisely in the beginning of their recovery, but years later find they need a more flexible pathway. We are growing and changing in our recovery.

A CHANGE: The WSBC of OA (World Service Business Conference) in May 2009 redefined abstinence. It is now: Abstinence in OA is the action of refraining from compulsive eating and compulsive behaviors.

There is a new email address for the bookstore of OA: (<http://bookstore.oa.org/>)
